The Circulation of The Bulletin

The Bulletin has the largest circulation of any paper in Eastern Connecticut and from three to four times larger than that of any in Norwich. It is delivered to over 3,000 of the 4,033 houses in Norwich, a record by ninety-three per cent of the people. In Windham it is delivered to over 100 houses, in Putnam and Danielson to over 100, and in all of these places it is considered the local daily.

Eastern Connecticut has forty-nine towns, one hundred and sixty-five postoffice districts, and sixty rural free delivery routes.

The Bulletin is sold in every town and on all of the R. F. D. routes in Eastern Connecticut.

WORRYING ENGLAND.

If Great Britain has needed anything to bring home to its people the full realization of the fact that a war is in progress and that, as has been vividly claimed, England is fighting for her existence, it has now been supplied by the German attack upon the British North Sea towns. Accompanied though it was by much daring such can hardly be considered unexpected since the probability of an invasion has been under discussion for some time, and even been expressed by military authorities that some such attack upon the English coast had not been attempted before.

The facts surrounding the movements of the squadron of German cruisers are lacking, but they have demonstrated conclusively that all the German navy is not tied up in the Kiel canal. Where they came from might be more easily determined if their identity was known. However, their excursion was accompanied by much hazard and if they succeeded in finding the blockading British fleet, they would have to fight a battle of much greater importance than the one they are a part of the main German fleet, even though light cruisers, they have made it apparent that they are not bottled up as tightly as claimed, while if there has been a signature of the British blockade line and this daily made for the purpose of testing the freedom of German vessels, similar trouble of a much more serious character can be anticipated.

First class evidence is given that greater activity can be expected in the North Sea, where the British fleet is stationed. With Germany placing all responsibility for the war on Great Britain it apparently intends to make it bear its proportionate part and weaken the support to the continental allies by maintaining a stronger defense at home.

PRACTICAL HOLIDAY RELIEF.

The Christmas season is always one for increased charity. There is always an opportunity to extend the helping hand and there are always plenty who are worthy of such attention. It is a season of gift making but it is also a time when a great number would appreciate their Christmas presents in the form of necessities.

For many Christmas would be made happier by the extension of such relief and in realization thereof it is a good suggestion that is made by Chairman Clark of the National Clean-up bureau of St. Louis when he points out that in almost every home there is an accumulation of old clothing, outgrown, out of style, and partly but not nearly worn out. Some of it is being worn by those who can afford new clothes and who ought to put the money and the clothes where they are needed, to stimulate trade and relieve the suffering. But many of these old clothes are only cluttering the attics and increasing the fire risk.

It can also be realized that if there was a cleaning out of attics and cellars, as Mr. Clark says, and the sending of bundles, or the phoning of their whereabouts, to a bureau of organization ensuring their distribution under proper auspices and care, that much prompt and practical relief would be given to much suffering among the many unfortunate in most communities.

Such an appeal might be applicable at other seasons of the year, but certainly it could accomplish no greater good than by recognition of its worth at this time.

TURKEY MUST APOLOGIZE.

Germany was the cause of the entrance of Turkey into the war. It is equally as anxious that Italy should at least maintain neutrality, but if the act of the Turks in the attack upon the Italian consulate at Hieleida, Arabia, should be the pretext for Italy's entrance upon the side of the allies it would indeed be a boomerang to the German strategy.

All efforts will, of course, be made to heal the rupture and the efforts of Germany can be expected to be devoted to giving Turkey some good advice in the present situation. Italy naturally resents the invasion of its consulate and the taking by force therefrom of the English consul to whom protection was being given.

Italy is not in a temper to be trifled with. It is entitled to full respect and the demand for an apology and reparation is only what might be expected under the circumstances. Whether the apology will be disposed to hasten its apologetic action will depend upon the pressure which Germany brings to bear, but there can be no question as to what that will be. The relations between Turkey and Italy are not such that Italy can be expected to overlook such an insult. The issuance of an ultimatum or the entrance of Italy into the war would be detrimental to the interests of Germany as is evidenced by its endeavors to prevent Italy from departing from its present adherence to neutrality. Thus it can be anticipated that Germany will direct Turkey's answer, for what Germany says goes with Turkey now.

DILLY DALLY POLICY.

It has been recognized from the very first that the maintenance of neutrality is a highly desirable thing on the part of this government relative to the distressing situation across the water. It is, however, no less a duty of this country that neutrality be maintained at all its possessions and among them must be included the canal zone.

Only a short time ago complaint was being made by the allies that certain countries of South America were permitting privileges in violation of neutrality whereby German vessels and interests were being aided. At the present time Col. Goethals, governor of the canal zone, tells this government that warships are needed by him in the maintenance of neutrality within the limits of United States territory. It is as important that we remain true to our stand wherever the stars and stripes fly, otherwise one or more of the belligerents will soon be warranted in reminding us of our responsibility.

It is just this which Col. Goethals seeks to avoid. He knows his duty and is endeavoring to perform it, but finds it impossible with the equipment at hand. He has experienced some delay in getting a decision upon his appeal to his superiors, but it is gratifying that he has been assured that he will get some assistance from the navy. It doesn't, however, look as if a proper amount of confidence was being placed in him when a dilly dally policy is maintained though it is known that prevention is better than a cure.

GRADUALLY PROVING ITS CLAIMS

Perhaps one of the most important announcements in connection with the plans made and projected for the development of Alaska is that which discloses the coal in the government-owned lands in the territory. It is as good a quality as can be found on the Pacific coast. This is a decided improvement over the results of a previous test for while the fuel taken from the Behring field failed to reach the required standard the subsequent tests of coal from the Matanuska field shows gratifying results.

When it is declared that there is sufficient coal in this latter field to supply all the government wants upon the Pacific coast it can be readily recognized as a possession of vast importance to the country, both for the direct benefit which will be derived and as further evidence of the wisdom of extending the government aid into that possession. It will be the government owned road already approved which will permit of its proper development and what it will do for the coal fields of the country, to believe it will accomplish in the opening up of the many other possibilities of that section.

Alaska has waited long and patiently for a recognition of its extensive resources. It has continued to be a valuable contributor to the supplies required by the country while getting along under its handicapped conditions, but through the persistence of its appeal and the confidence in its future stronger evidence is presented almost daily that it has what it claims and that it will yet get the attention it deserves.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Meriden came back to the republican column with a bang.
It may be a question of who's who in Mexico, but in Arizona it is a question of who's hit?

Philanthropy and charity always find this a season bristling with opportunities for good deeds.

The laying off of 2,500 men in the repair shops of the New Haven road doesn't disclose a very healthy prosperity outlook.

Life has been said to be a game of seesaw, with the many ups and downs but that isn't anything more than can be said of war.

The idea of annexing the north pole might just as well be abandoned. Alaska isn't near as far and we aren't looking for that property.

New England certainly shows an interest in catering to South American trade and there is no reason why it should not get its share of it.

In urging two battleships for the navy Secretary Daniels declares we should proceed as if the war in Europe was non-existent. If that is the case why consider Europe at all?

THEIR BUSINESS RUSH

"Since that day," said the duty woman with the trusting expression, "I am consumed with wonder, wondering how any business man transacts business or even makes a living. If I ran my house that way I'd have my husband, my job and my happy home."

"I made the fatal mistake of telephoning Alfred when I was downtown with a shopping list a yard long, and Alfred bailed my voice with glee. He said it was so fortunate I was where I was because the real estate man who had been hiring him on was anxious for me to go out twelve miles on the north shore to look at a house which he knew was exactly what he wanted—and would be glad to sell right over to Alfred's office and we would go with Mr. Vibbles."

"I reluctantly consented. I folded away my shopping list and pounded over the pavements to the office, arriving breathless but triumphant in the feeling that I had not kept the two men waiting nor wasted any of their valuable time. Alfred looked up from some figuring and regarded me in an abstracted manner for a moment. Then he threw down his pen and cried in the most surprised manner. Then he grabbed the telephone. 'Clean forgetful of my errand,' he said, 'I am coming in and—'

"He tried to look bland when he turned from his conversation and met my gaze, but he couldn't. He said Vibbles was out and had left word that he would call Alfred up from where he was.

"Alfred was terribly polite trying to soothe me. He gave me a journal dealing with concrete and nervously said it was a pleasant day. Twenty minutes passed and Alfred again called Vibbles' office. It seemed Mr. Vibbles had returned, and, not getting any message from Alfred as he had expected, he started to be called. Alfred assured the people he not shaved very swiftly in these big offices and that Mr. Vibbles would be a second.

"The case was opened by John Baker, the Solicitor General of the land. Addressing the court, he followed the case all the way through. The controversy was a long one, but it ended in the death, started when Mills put for sale some land which he owned. This was sold by auction, and all present were to bear the cost of the prisoner's purpose, to break up the sale. The prisoner had replied in some bifurcated term, and the matter was dropped for lack of time.

Two doctors, Hamilton and Edwards, were then called to the stand. They had been called to inspect the body of the deceased, replied in the affirmative. Dr. Hamilton was asked a question, whether or not the shot could have been fired while the deceased was in a state of self-defense, or whether it was a case of self-defense. He replied that he positively could not have been in a posture of self-defense, as he had entered on the right side, nearer to the back than the front of the body.

Dr. Horne, who was also with Hamilton after the death, on being questioned, replied that he could throw no more to throw any light than Hamilton had already related.

Barbot, in his defense, tried to prove that he was not the man who fired the shot and called some witnesses to bear out the fact that he was at the time at New Britain. The same witnesses, upon being cross-examined, did not speak clearly or firmly and they were often contradicted by themselves and the evidence on the other side.

The jury then retired, and after consulting half an hour, came back with the verdict. The president then sentenced him to death. Upon hearing this, Barbot burst out to the court: "May I please your Honors, since it can no longer avail me to contest the fact, I will make a full confession of the whole." He then stated the story of how he attended the land sale at which both he and Mills were present. He had demanded an apology to which Mills had replied to the effect that he was always at Barbot's service when properly called upon.

The prisoner then told how on the following Thursday morning he had written a letter to the deceased and told the writer at the dawn of day near Lowell Church, armed with a case of pistols. This meeting never occurred, for the deceased wrote back a letter in answer and in all there were six letters passed between them before a meeting could be properly arranged. The last letter written was by Mills, telling Barbot to meet him at Fugate Bay. The following morning he had gone out in a canoe manned by some colored men and rowed to Fugate Bay, where he met with him the black boy who carried his case.

Not long after, the deceased came up, riding furiously on a horse. Mills then jumped off his horse and shot the pistols from the holsters, both he and Mills present. He then told how he fired the shot, and Mills dropped, crying: "Sir, you have killed me. You have killed me, sir." Whereupon he replied: "I am heartily sorry, sir. I pray God to bless you. I can say no longer here." He then ran to the canoe and jumped in with the colored boy, and went back to town until his arrest. He said also that when he asked the boy if the pistol of Mr. Mills had been fired he said it had snapped.

After his confession, there could be no doubt as to his guilt. He was sentenced on the 26th of January, 1793, to hang, and the sentence was pronounced against him.

around in this ridiculous fashion. Alfred bridled and said: "It was plain to me that I knew nothing of business and that the business man's time was not his own."

"He said that just then. He said that it was plain to me that I knew nothing of business and that the business man's time was not his own."

"Arriving at the main entrance of the Blank hotel we waited ten minutes and, going around to the side entrance, which had not been mentioned, found Mr. Vibbles. He was one of these charming, well-groomed persons, absolutely not to be trifled. He said casually that he had been so rushed that he was late, yet he looked perfectly placid. I know perfectly well he had taken our errand and that he had been waiting for me. Just then Alfred remembered that he had to phone a man which he did for five minutes.
